

Reagan addresses nation says U.S. will propose elimination of short-range missiles

SHELLEY L. MCMURDIE
Senior Reporter

The United States has reached the break point, according to President Ronald Reagan, now is time to act.

Monday night's nationally-televised address from the Oval Office, President Reagan discussed the situation in the Persian Gulf, as well as progress in arms control and the nation's budget woes.

"Our own role in the gulf is vital. It is to protect our interests and to help our friends in the region protect theirs," he said.

Speaking of the controversy concerning the re-arming of 11 Kuwaiti ships as U.S. vessels, Reagan said the United States will accept the responsibility for the ships in the face of threats by Iran or anyone else.

"In a word, if we don't do the job, the Soviets will," he said.

Reagan said the U.S. is currently involved in very sensitive negotiations with the Soviets concerning arms control. Allied support has cleared the way for a major arms-reduction agreement with the Soviets on short- and medium-range missiles in Europe, and he said the next step could be to make a 50 percent cut in strategic forces.

As the United States and its allies work to pursue their goals, President Reagan said Scoop Jackson's philosophy should be kept in mind - that of bipartisanship.

"Only with help will we accomplish important arms reductions," he said. "We and our allies have reached full consensus on our negotiating position."

The president said the United States, in negotiations in Geneva, would propose the global elimination of shorter-range missiles and a deep reduction, with hopes of full elimination, of longer-range missiles.

"Honesty compels me to tell you of the continuing threat of deficit spending. It's just that they realize how interdependent our economies are," he said, speaking of other international leaders.

While Reagan commended Congress for its work with the Graham-Rudman-Hollings efforts, he chastised them for not coming up with a deficit-reduction plan.

"We have now reached the break point," he said. And according to the president, it's not working. It can either be more government, more taxation and more regulation or addition growth, greater opportunity and more for the family budget, not the federal budget.

Together with Congress, the U.S. must reform the budget process. Second, the American people must seek the immediate help of representatives to agree to responsibility. And thirdly, Reagan called again for the line-item veto.

"We must have the ability to reach in and cut out the waste," he said.

Reagan said it's time for action. "Nothing less than our economic future is at stake. Our constitutional rights have their equally important economic rights — the right to future," he said.

Concerning last week's seven-nation economic summit in Venice, Reagan denied reports that nothing was accomplished. On the contrary, he said he achieved "everything we had hoped to accomplish."

Utah plant powers California

Utah now has a $5.5 billion direct connection with Disneyland and Southern California.

The Intermountain Power Project near Delta was fired up May 1 and now provides electrical power to 4.4 million California residents.

The power plant, which burns Utah coal, was operating during dedicatory services Saturday.

In the Mormon Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch called Utah coal deposits "the Saudi Arabia of coal."

He said the plant was a "masterpiece of modern technology. There is no other example of a project so dedicated to protect the environment."

He said children were riding roller coasters at Disneyland with power from the IPP.

During the ceremony, a crowd of 10,000 toured the plant and were treated to a complimentary barbecue lunch and afternoon of musical performances.

The plant, which started construction on May 1, 1978, completed the project 18 months ahead of schedule and $100 million under budget.

Rose, engineering manager for BMT, said they saved money by using lump-sum contracts with contractors, which included all costs associated with construction.

Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch and the Mormon Tabernacle Choir join the Intermountain Power Plant dedicatory service Saturday near Delta.

"The contractors were paid on a basis of work completed with incentives to stay on schedule," said Rose. "We also saved in labor costs. To build the plant we used 20 million man-hours of labor with no labor disputes or interruptions."

Rose said the extra amounts of money, which were not used, were built into the budget to cover unforeseen costs.

The plant burns 100,000 tons of coal per day, producing 6.5 million pounds of steam per hour, while 167,000 gallons of water per minute pass through the cooling towers. This totals 1,600 megawatts (1.6 trillion watts) of electrical power, said Reece D. Nielsen, chairman of the Intermountain Power Agency board.

Nielsen said industry thrives in Utah, but the IPP would be impossible without the help of the people from California.

Rose said 96 percent of the power goes to California, while Utah Power and Light uses only 4 percent in Utah.

He said the idea for the giant power plant came from a group of people in Sandy who wanted to build a 200-megawatt plant to meet Utah's power demand. The idea evolved into a 3,000 megawatt plant, but was scaled down to 1,600 megawatts to avoid providing an overabundance of power.

In his dedicatory prayer, President Thomas S. Monson of the First Presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints said that the project is an example of God's creations and that it is an inspiration to see men working together.

He called the work "a Herculean effort."

Gov. Norman H. Bangerter said 40 years from now the state will still be benefiting from the plant through revenues.

USX, BMT reach labor agreement

United Steelworkers reached a three-year labor agreement on Friday with the BMT Manufacturing and Technology, Inc., for the operation of Geneva Works, officials said.

The labor agreement is a major part of BMT's bid to buy Geneva Works, officials said.

The United Steel Corporation, which owned the mill, planned to close the mill.

James E. Cannon, legal counsel for BMT and Robert Petris, director of the U.S. District 38, announced they had reached the agreement that will go to the union membership for ratification this month.

But the union said the agreement presents a good package of wages and benefits for employees, and provides the foundation for reopening Geneva Works on an "economically sound and viable basis."

The 26-month contract reportedly includes wage concessions as well as a profit-sharing program to be initiated once the plant begins producing, perhaps as early as this summer.

A secret-ballot ratification vote will be conducted Saturday following a membership meeting on Friday to explain the agreement. Official details of the agreement are being withheld pending notification of union members.

Petris is scheduled to explain the tentative agreement and contract ramifications to local union members at the Friday meeting.

BMT has said they will employ 800-1,000 of the 1,900 idle Geneva workers.

A union member, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said the full contract will not be given to union members. "They are only mailing out flyers telling them what is good, they are not answering any questions," he said.

"What about all we don't know? All the promises and guarantees BMT makes are only as good as their money in the bank," the union member said. "To our knowledge they are financing 100 percent of the sale, so nothing is in the bank."

The union member said he does not expect the contract to be ratified Saturday. "I think the only ones who will vote for it are those who have nothing to lose," he said. "And they aren't enough to carry the vote."

BYU team links computer systems; allows for greater automation

BYU is leading the way in yet another field. Dr. S. Soceneantu, professor of computer science at BYU, is supervising a project that links up computers to perform complicated tasks. "Computers today are like the ones developed 30 years ago," said Soceneantu, "They operate sequentially, meaning that they perform only one task at a time."

In this project, computer scientists are developing a way of linking computers in a parallel configuration so multiple commands can be given to computer-controlled devices, said Soceneantu.

July 3 declared a holiday; BYU classes cancelled

BYU will join the state of Utah in observing Independence Day July 3 as a holiday this year, according to academic advisement.

As a result, no classes will be held and most academic staff members will have the day off.

Although a finalized list is unavailable, Central scheduling anticipates that the Wilkinson Building and the Harold B. Lee Library will be closed buildings open.

Officials at the bookstore indicated the store will be closed both the third and fourth in observance of the national holiday.

"Parallelism is doing more than one task at a time," said Soceneantu. "What we are doing is finding a way for multiple computers to collaborate so that large tasks are completed by several computers."

The applications of this type of technology are numerous, he said.

"Factories could be automated in a new way that would allow robotics to perform jobs that in the past were impossible," said Soceneantu.

Currently computer-controlled robot arms receive their commands sequentially, said Soceneantu.

The computer tells the arm to extend itself, then to rotate, then to grip, and so on. "With multiple computers controlling the functions and collaborating the commands, the arm could extend, rotate and grip in one motion, just like a human arm," said Soceneantu.

In many factories today robot functions are limited to the manipulation of objects that are the same size and weight. With this technology, varied types of objects could be controlled and the computers could take into consideration non-homogeneous objects, said Soceneantu.

"This work is progressing well, but without great support from Dr. Bill Hays, chairman of the computer science department, and the master's degree candidates with whom I work, the project would not have progressed," said Soceneantu.

"Steve Renshaw and Russ Jacobson have designed and constructed an operating robot arm which utilizes the new computer language being written by Kenny Fung and Rex Hatch. Byron Nilsson is designing the actual computer hardware," said Soceneantu.

Byron Nielson, a senior from Sandy majoring in electrical engineering, struggles to reclaim his glasses from the arm of an automated robot in the Talmage

Building. A BYU group is expanding robot functions through a new command system.

Numerous stolen textbooks are sold back to bookstore

Since Fall semester 1986, 65 textbooks valued at $2,184 were reported stolen by BYU students and faculty. Those numbers represent only part of the problem.

"We know many people don't report their thefts," said Paul Bringham, University Police crime prevention specialist.

The problem comes up every semester, according to Bringham. Textbooks are stolen and then sold to the bookstore during book buy-back at the end of the semester.

"Students should write their names, student numbers and the semester inside the front cover along with some identifying mark elsewhere to help recover stolen books," said Chief Robert W. Kelshaw of University Police.

Books left unattended in a public place increase the chance for theft. Books, like everything else, are increasing in price. A stolen book is a 100-percent profit for the thief; his only investment is the chance of getting caught.

Kelshaw said that students should not leave books lying around unattended. If books are stolen, students should report the theft immediately. A recovery may be made at a resale counter, and a thief apprehended.

Most books are stolen during buy-back periods, so now is the time to be aware, said Bringham.

As soon as a student realizes his book is stolen, he should report it to the University Police. He will then get an authorization card from the police to get access to book buy-back to see if it was sold back. If a student finds his book, the police can look up the I.D. number of the student who sold it.

"It is difficult to sell back a book and to be able to get away with it," said Bringham. The only way someone can get away with stealing a book is if the victim does not report his book stolen.

According to Kelshaw, the most common places for textbook thefts are the dorms, the library, the Morris Center, the Cannon Center, the Cougar Center, dance classes and the testing center.

Textbooks are stolen because students set them down on a table in the Cougar Center or library and walk away to do something, said Bringham.

Many theft victims report they were away from their books no longer than 30 seconds to a minute, Kelshaw said.

"Students can aid in preventing thefts by watching and immediately reporting suspicious persons," said Bringham. "If you see a person set his books on a table and walk off and

No camels in Jerusalem Middle East students misunderstood

Newspapers read "Tension high in Middle East" or "Leaders split on peace conference." But behind the headlines are people.

There are some people like Vivian Mushahwar, a sophomore majoring in electrical engineering from Jerusalem. Mushahwar, a Palestinian, said her family does not discuss politics because "we're living these things — we are witnesses of what's happening."

And what is happening in the Middle East is something Mushahwar finds Americans are ignorant about. She said participating in International Week last February made her "realize what we really are to the Americans."

Mushahwar made a list of some of the questions she was asked, such as "How many camels are there in Jerusalem?"

"There is only one, for tourists, and it's tied up near a motel," Mushahwar said.

Rana Zobi, a freshman majoring in interior design from Amman, Jordan, has also been asked about camels. She said she has noticed that Americans do not seem to have much information about other countries, especially the Middle East.

"Do I look like a camel rider to you?" Zobi asked. "This is the way we dress back home."

Rima Hamarneh, another freshman from Amman, Jordan, who is majoring in manufacturing technology, said that when she was flying to the United States, the man sitting by her asked if they have televisions in Jordan. She noted that Jordanians have access to both new technology as well as old traditions.

Roxanne Taghavy, a sophomore majoring in advertising from Tehran, Iran, said although the United States has many job opportunities, "what I miss is its (Iran's) oldness." She said because America is a fairly new country, it lacks ancient traditions.

"The whole country is prefabricated," Taghavy said.

LDS Church pays taxes and penalties

HEBER CITY, Utah (AP) — The LDS Church has not appealed Wasatch County's denial of its request to exempt six properties from taxes and has paid $17,266 in taxes, penalties and interest, officials say.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints requested the property tax exemptions on nearly 288 acres of campgrounds, claiming they should not be taxed because they are charitable and provide for spiritual needs through leadership training, Boy Scout, young women's, priesthood and family activities.

It claimed the properties are non-profit — purchased, built and maintained with donated funds and volunteer labor.

The county commission first denied the request in 1981. The Church appealed to the State Tax Commission, but the commission told the Church to return to the county to reconcile the differences.

Last January Church representatives again argued their case before the county commissioners, who requested an opinion from County Attorney Steve Hansen and said they would rule on the matter based on his opinion.

Hansen said the commission should deny the exemption. Church representatives did not request another hearing, and paid the tax bill.

In his written opinion, Hansen said the definition for charity is "a gift to the community for general public use," but church camps are gifts to the church and used exclusively by church groups.

PTL supporters want Bakkers to return

TEGA CAY, S.C. (AP) — Former PTL leader Jim Bakker and his wife, Tammy, remained silent about their next move Sunday, while some PTL supporters said they want the couple back at the television ministry.

The Bakkers, who have been ordered to vacate the PTL-owned Tega Cay home they have been living in, were in seclusion there until Sunday afternoon, then drove off to an undisclosed location.

Since they returned to the house Wednesday night, they have said they expect to be on television within 30 days, but have not said where.

Jim Bakker admitted to a sexual encounter with a church secretary and resigned in March from the ministry he founded. The Rev. Jerry Falwell, independent Baptist and Moral Majority founder, took over the financially troubled PTL operation.

Last Friday, PTL filed for protection from creditors while reorganizing under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code. The Bakkers have had no comment on the filing.

Bangerter proclaims July 3 a holiday

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Gov. Norm Bangerter has declared July 3 a holiday for state employees, and also says Utah will benefit from its bid for the $4.4 billion superconducting supercollider whether it wins the project or not.

Bangerter said during a news conference Monday that he had to declare the holiday in an official proclamation because of an attorney general's opinion that said employees could not take off a regular working day just because the official holiday, in this case Independence Day, came on their day off.

In his proclamation, the governor declared July 3, a Friday, a day of "thanksgiving and gratitude for our independence."

He also urged Utahns to remember the significance of the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Constitution on the holiday.

The problem was that July 4 falls on a Saturday, and there is no state statute automatically allowing a Saturday holiday to be observed on the preceding Friday.

In other matters, Bangerter said he will meet with state officials next week for a final discussion of whether the state should proceed with its bid for the supercollider.

Family grief not considered in sentencing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled Monday that the impact of a murder on the victim's family may not be considered when a convicted killer faces a possible death sentence. By a 5-4 vote, the justices overturned the death sentence for a Maryland man convicted of brutally killing an elderly couple.

The court said the jury that sentenced the man to be executed may have been inflamed by evidence that the couple were dearly loved by family members who said they were devastated by the murders.

Gene Patterson, representing a coalition of victims' rights groups, said the decision "is a slap in the face to all victims of violent crime. It's a major setback to our movement because in essence the ruling says the rights of convicted murderers take precedence over the rights of innocent victims."

Victims' rights organizations argued unsuccessfully that society has a vital stake in meting out the harshest penalties in retribution for the harm done to families of those killed.

Students attack police in Korean cities

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Students poured off campuses to fight riot police with rocks and firebombs Monday and thousands of people marched from a church through the capital, chanting "Rise up! Rise up!"

Students fought police in at least eight other cities in the sustained and violent campaign against President Chun Doo-hwan's authoritarian government which began last Wednesday.

Authorities said more than 200 officers were injured or beaten. Mobs of students attacked at least five police stations in various cities and burned tear-gas rifles, shields and other gear seized from police in street battles. Protesters trapped and beat a unit of 43 officers in Yongin, south of Seoul.

Attacks on and beatings of police have become commonplace since the protests began last week to coincide with a convention of Chun's ruling Democratic Justice Party which endorsed his choice of fellow ex-general Roh Tae-Woo to succeed him as president next February.

Critics of the government demand democratic reforms, including direct presidential elections, which Chun has refused.

North trades his testimony for limited immunity grant

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge Monday ordered Lt. Col. Oliver North to testify, under a limited grant of immunity from prosecution, before the congressional committees investigating the Iran-Contra affair.

U.S. District Judge Louis Oberdorfer, the court's acting chief judge, signed the order granting North limited or "use" immunity from prosecution.

The order, sought by the House and Senate committees, directs North to give testimony which he had refused to provide another congressional panel late last year.

The public Iran-Contra hearings are in recess this week, but panel lawyers are to take depositions in private from North and his one-time boss, former National Security Adviser John Poindexter, in preparation for their public testimony next month.

The public hearings resume a week from Tuesday.

The committees also obtained an order granting limited immunity Monday for Glenn Robinette, a former CIA official who installed a security system at North's home in Great Falls, Va.

Congressional sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the panels are trying to determine if Robinette was paid for the work from a secret Swiss bank account controlled by retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard Secord. Secord has denied any such connection.

On June 4, the House panel voted 12-3 and the Senate panel voted unanimously to give North limited, or use, immunity, which would prohibit prosecutors from using any resulting congressional testimony by the former National Security Council aide as evidence against him.

Independent Counsel Lawrence E. Walsh had asked the committees not to vote to grant immunity to North. Though the panels rejected Walsh's request, they agreed to put off public testimony by North until at least July 16.

North, invoking his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination, declined to testify before Congress when the Iran-Contra affair was first unraveling last fall.

'Y' student charged with kidnap attempt; woman evades, runs from potential captor

A BYU student was charged with committing three felonies and a misdemeanor by courts in Provo and Spanish Fork.

Shawn William Turley, 24, of 688 South 880 W. was arrested and charged in Provo on June 11 with attempted kidnapping—a third-degree felony—and unauthorized control of a vehicle—a misdemeanor.

According to Paul Richards, director of BYU Public Communications, on June 10 at 7:45 p.m., a female student came out of her class in building B-66, east of the Snell building, to get into her car. Turley allegedly slid in the driver's side of the victim's car and told the student to "move over and put her head down."

She said he told her he had a pistol and threatened to use it if she did not do as he said. The victim did not see a pistol so she decided to slide over, open the car door and run back into her class. She told her instructor about the incident and they called the University Police. In the meantime, the man had driven away in the victim's car. The car was later found abandoned a few blocks away.

Bail was set at $5,000.

In a separate incident, Turley was charged Monday with aggravated sexual assault—a first-degree felony—and attempted rape—a second-degree felony—in Spanish Fork Circuit Court.

'Y' coeds vie for title

Eight BYU students are among 61 contestants from across the state who will vie for the title of "Miss Utah" in the 1987 Miss Utah/Miss America pageant in Orem, said a pageant spokeswoman.

Activities will begin tonight and run through Saturday night, when the final crowning will take place.

Roseanne Neilson, executive director of the pageant, said this year's pageant should be extremely challenging. "We have some outstanding contestants this year."

"The talents are strong and the preparation seems to be very thorough. We also have several contestants who are back to compete in the pageant a second and third time," she said.

Each contestant has already won at least one competition, said Elaine Englehardt, pageant spokeswoman. "The competition will be strong," she said.

Competitors are judged in four areas: talent, interview, swim suit and evening gown.

"The judges will award each contestant points on their performance in these areas. The ten contestants with the highest number of points will compete on Saturday night for the title of Miss Utah," said Neilson.

A parade featuring the contestants will kick off the event tonight at 8:45 on Center Street by the Orem City Center.

Following the parade there will be three street dances held on Center Street involving three styles of dance music. "Just follow the street until you hear your favorite kind of music," said Englehardt.

All activities for the pageant will be held at Mountain View High, 645 W. Center St. in Orem.

Mushahwar was also asked during International Week about her relationship with other Middle Eastern countries. Someone asked her how she could sit by a Jordanian without fighting.

Mushahwar said "they missed the point that we are both Arabs." Zobi said she has close friends that are Arab and Jewish, even though she and Israel disagree politically on the Jordan.

Donna L. Bowen, BYU political science professor, said if any other ethnic group in America were hated like the Arabs are by the media, they would sue.

"The basic assumption is that the Arabs are cheats and liars and liars," Bowen said.

She said she is amazed by the number of questions that contain anti-Arab biases when she lectures about the Middle East. Bowen has lectured in Egypt, Tunisia, Iran, Morocco, and visited several other countries in the Middle East.

She said the Arab stereotype persists in America partly because there are few Arabs in the United States and many are afraid to speak.

Once they raised the price of oil, we became national enemies," Zobi said.

Zobi said she has had several polarizing conversations and most of them have been "anti-Arab."

Mushahwar has also found many different beliefs about the Arabs.

"I said some people may think Palestinians are told to hate Jews. We don't have anything against Jews or Judaism in any way," Mushahwar said. "For us, we want to go home and we want to go back to our country."

Mushahwar said the American school system is very good and teachers help the students learn to rely on themselves. Zobi also said she enjoys learning at BYU.

"I'm used to kind of a conservative society," Zobi said. "I find it a safe place. I trust people here more than anywhere else in the U.S.A."

Mushahwar said BYU's Code of Honor appealed to her when she applied. She said her parents were also impressed with the code.

"We live these things back home," she said.

Naser said coming to America has been a good experience. She said she has enjoyed sharing her culture and learning about a new one.

"Palestinians hate blood, hate war more than anything else in the world, because we're living it," she said.

Reena Naser, a freshman majoring in interior design from Amman, Jordan, feels it is her "duty to give people the right picture of my country." She said Arabs are known for their generosity and hospitality. Hamarneh said her mother prepares extra food at each meal for unexpected visitors that usually come.

"I've never been at lunch without two or more extra people," Hamarneh said.

Naser said visitors are "the center of attraction" in Jordan, a tradition she has not seen repeated in the United States. Hamarneh said Americans seem too busy to spend time with foreigners.

According to Bowen, another strong cultural aspect in the Middle East is the family. She said an Arab's honor is dependent upon the family.

"In the churches back home they don't ever spend time talking about family because it's already part of the tradition," Hamarneh said.

Zobi said it is not unlikely to find an older brother quitting school if necessary to help support his family. Hamarneh said she knows a man who put his brothers through school by driving a taxi, and that such sacrifice is "not unusual."

Mushahwar said education is also valued in the Middle East, and Palestinians are some of the most educated people.

"Education is a permanent weapon," she said. "Nobody can take your education away from you."

Hamarneh said the American school system is very good and teachers help the students learn to rely on themselves. Zobi also said she enjoys learning at BYU.

"I'm used to kind of a conservative society," Zobi said. "I find it a safe place. I trust people here more than anywhere else in the U.S.A."

The BYU Monte L. Bean Museum recently acquired a butterfly collection that has taken a lifetime to amass.

Oskar Dorfmann, of Salt Lake City, has collected over 10,000 butterflies and moths over the course of his 84 years.

"He knew he wasn't going to be able to keep them forever, so he allowed us to take over the collection," said Richard Baumann, manager and associate curator of insects at the Monte L. Bean Museum.

According to Baumann, Dorfmann's collection is of great value to the museum because of the rare specimens and the quality of the collection as a whole.

"His collection is immaculate," said Baumann. "The quality is more important than the numbers."

Dorfmann began collecting butterflies and moths as a boy in Poland, but lost his first collection in a fire that destroyed his family home. He lost his second collection when he was imprisoned in a concentration camp by the Germans during World War II, according to Baumann.

When Dorfmann was released at the end of the war, he started accumulating butterflies again.

According to W. Levi Phillips, lepidoptera researcher at the Bean Museum, Dorfmann has traveled extensively and has collected specimens in the Alps, the Himalayas, and the Appalachian mountains.

"Some species in this collection just can't be found anymore," said Phillips. "Oskar collected two gynandromorphs, which are half male and half female. They are one-in-a-million collections."

"Most people are oh-my collectors," said Baumann. "Those are the ones who collect the big, pretty butterflies. Oskar, however, did a collection that has great scientific value."

According to Baumann, another unusual feature of the collection is that the specimens are well spread and labeled.

The Bean Museum acquired the collection because of the association between Dorfmann and Phillips. "I was one of the first to organize the Utah Lepidoptera Society," said Phillips. "I met Oskar at one of our meetings and we've been friends since then."

"He values his collection very much," said Phillips. "He put his life into it."

Various sections of the collection will be on display at the Bean Museum throughout the summer.

According to University Police, there are five types of book thieves:

- The kleptomaniac is the hardest to detect. He steals because of a compulsion and is generally ashamed of himself. He is usually relieved when caught and needs psychiatric help because of this mental illness. He usually has everything he's stolen in one place—usually in his bedroom—and does not mutilate the stolen material.
- A person who steals for personal use is also difficult to detect. He does not sell the books, and steals for pride of possession or to use stolen objects. He feels he has a right to the books and is unlikely to feel ashamed if caught. He will keep items in a well-controlled area like a bank vault. If stolen for use, he will leave them out with other books. He will also remove marking and possibly have books rebound.
- The person who steals in anger has a grudge against the institution or member of the institution or library management. This individual is defying authority and destroys items stolen. He does not usually repeat the act.
- The casual thief steals only because opportunity exists. He may find himself with a rare book. He will sell the item later, but sometimes before selling he loses courage and destroys the item.
- The person who steals for profit is behind most book thefts. This individual may have spurious credentials and is the easiest to catch. He generally wants items of great value that are easy to steal. He wants to sell the items quickly, and goes to booksellers or librarians to sell books, claiming they were inherited or found in an attic.

Students are returning to the study of Latin

By B. SOUTH
Universe Staff Writer

The virtue of one man can be able to preserve the students in Latin 111 who faced this question on exam were not required to answer it, but wrote it from Latin into English. BYU Latin professor Thomas Jefferson and other scholars study of this ancient language.

"It is a bit of a renaissance going on in Latin across the country," said John F. Hall, BYU's Latin professor.

"BYU's Latin program has doubled in both faculty and enrollment over the last five years," he said. "I attribute the increase to poor scores on the tests."

Latin renaissance

"A lot of people have seen such a decline in SAT scores the last 10 years," he said. "They feel that like Latin is needed to help students get a better understanding of what language is."

Hall said that during the 1960s, 1970s, and early 80s, there was a belief in education that anything was good. When people became dissatisfied with the new, they turned toward the old, including Latin.

"Woodward seems to be looking for Latin teaching now," Hall said.

Hall said that every year there are positions for Latin teachers that go unfilled. Hall said Latin is also offered at the junior-high level and about a dozen elementary schools have recently begun Latin programs.

"I think all the schools ought to teach it," Hall said.

Origin of languages

Norbert O. Duckwitz, professor of Greek and Latin, said Latin helps strengthen ability in English grammar, syntax, and construction. He said many English majors take Latin classes. According to Hall, 70 percent of the English vocabulary is derived from Latin.

Duckwitz has found Latin helpful in studying literature. While studying literature in college, Duckwitz became interested in the origins of language and classical works.

"I really did feel that I needed to get to the basis of the literature—where did the literature begin, and how did the literature begin," he said.

Duckwitz said that much literature, like Shakespeare, contains allusions to classical works as well as to classical language. He wanted to become more familiar with these references and felt Latin would help.

"One simply has to know the classics in order to appreciate what these fine poets did," Duckwitz said.

In addition to English, Hall said, the romance languages evolved from Latin. When he served a mission in Mexico, Hall used Latin to think of a word he did not know in Spanish, then he added a Spanish ending. This technique produced either the exact Spanish word or something similar enough that "they knew what I was talking about."

Robert Maxwell, a graduate student in Latin from Tucson, Ariz., studied French as an undergraduate. He said Latin courses helped him study the history of the French language. Maxwell said Latin allows "you to get to know the literature that's really the basis of our Western heritage."

Latin teaches discipline

Hall and Duckwitz both agree that Latin teaches discipline. Hall said that Latin helps train the mind.

Jocelyn Wuibout, a senior in history and humanities from Reimes, France, is taking Latin to prepare herself for a master's in French and Italian literature.

"It helps your brain function very logically," she said.

Hall said the logic and discipline combine to provide good preparation for law school and medical school. When a BYU Latin major applied to the University of Chicago Law School, Hall said, not only was she accepted, but the dean wrote to him asking for more people trained in Latin and the classics.

Duckwitz said Harvard Law School is also particularly interested in Latin majors. He said Latin majors have been "very successful" in being accepted to the country's best law schools. Hall said courses in pre-legal Latin and pre-medical Latin are offered.

'Y' bakers are first to report for work

By RANDALL L. BECKHAM
Universe Staff Writer

Of the thousands of behind-the-scenes people it takes to run BYU throughout the year, the bakers are the first to arrive on campus each morning to get the university up and running.

And what does it take to be a BYU baker? "The ability to be faster than a speeding bullet," said Doug Anderson, 32, a baker who arrives at 3:30 a.m. He was a BYU student with a business major when he took a job as a part-time baker ten years ago. "I liked baking so much," he said, "I decided to make it my career."

Dick Badham, a baker who arrives before 2 a.m. each morning said, "We produce practically every bread item served at BYU." According to the BYU Employment Office, Badham is the first person on campus to report for work each morning.

"Even with the modern baking equipment BYU has, it takes more time than most people realize to get fresh doughnuts and bread to them," he said.

An average spring/summer day's work includes the making of about 2,900 doughnuts, sweet rolls and variety items, 400 loaves of bread, 900 brownies and over 1,000 hamburger, hot-dog and deli buns. And this doesn't include numerous pies, cakes and many other specialty items BYU bakers create each day.

The massive bakery is located on the first floor of the Wilkinson Center, where five full-time and 10 part-time people are employed. Every day, different orders come from each eating establishment on campus, including the Missionary Training Center, BYU Catering, Vending Services and all campus cafeterias.

"With the many youth conferences on campus right now, we never know exactly what the demand will be," said Badham. "Every day is different."

The bakers' work schedule that requires them to be here so early is often difficult. "My family has to get used to me getting to bed a little earlier than most other fathers," said Anderson, referring to his 8 p.m. bedtime. "There are usually a lot of things going on at that time of the evening, and it is sometimes a struggle to keep my kids a little more quiet so I can get some sleep," he said.

"The funny thing about my job is when my neighbors tell me I have a 'cushy' job because they see me come home from work before noon every day. But they don't see me when I leave," he said.

Andrea Mortensen, a baker who arrives at 3 a.m. to fry doughnuts, said, "I have to adjust my whole life around my work schedule. I usually miss a lot of socializing in the evenings, but the fact that I get home early makes it all worthwhile."

Anderson agrees. "I get to spend more time with my family."

Fetuses may respond to outside noises

By REBECCA HARRISON
Universe Staff Writer

The youngest students are still in the womb, and, at the age of 20 weeks, these tiny fetuses are able to distinguish sounds and show preferences toward certain types of music, research indicates.

Gone are the days when behavioral scientists believed the unborn baby's world was, as psychologist William James wrote, "a place of booming, buzzing confusion."

"There is a great deal of evidence suggesting that the fetus responds physically to musical stimuli by kicking in rhythm," said Rosalie Pratt, BYU music professor and international educator.

"Music that is pleasant to listen to directly and indirectly affects the mood of the child," she said.

In a book entitled, "The Secret Life of the Unborn Child," Dr. Thomas Verny explains, "A four- or five-month-old fetus definitely responds to sound and melody — and responds in very discriminating ways. Put Vivaldi on the phonograph and even the most agitated baby relaxes. Put Beethoven on and even the calmest child starts kicking and moving."

"At the very least, a pregnant woman who spends a few minutes each day listening to soothing music could make her child feel more relaxed and tranquil. At most, that early exposure might create in the child a lifelong musical interest."

That interest was instilled in the conductor of the Hamilton Philharmonic Symphony, Boris Brott.

"As a young man," said Brott, "I was mystified by this unusual ability I had — to play certain pieces sight unseen. I'd be conducting a score for the first time and, suddenly, the cello line would jump out at me; I'd know the flow of the piece even before I turned the page of the score."

"One day, I mentioned this to my mother, who is a professional cellist. I thought she'd be intrigued because it was always the cello line that was so distinct in my mind. She was; but when she heard what the pieces were, the mystery was quickly solved."

"All the scores I knew sight unseen were ones she had played while she was pregnant with me."

Elias Carnetti thinks the primal memory of one's mother's heartbeat also explains a lot about our musical tastes. All known drum rhythms, he points out, conform to one of two basic patterns — either the rapid tattoo of animal hooves, or the measured beat of the human heart.

In addition, studies done by audiologist Michele Clements show the unborn child has distinct musical likes and dislikes.

Clements claims that Mozart and Vivaldi are favorite composers of the unborn child. Whenever one of their compositions was put on a record player, fetal heart rates steadied and kicking declined. The music of Brahms and Beethoven, and all forms of rock, on the other hand, drove most fetuses to distraction.

In addition to responding to different types of music, babies can also understand speech patterns while still in the womb.

For example, it has been proven that newborn babies respond to the sounds of their own mothers' voices.

Psychologist Anthony DeCasper conducted a study testing these kinds of responses.

In the study, he offered newborns two choices: the mother reading a nursery rhyme, and another woman reading the same verse. In significant numbers, the infants preferred the sound of their own mothers' voices.

Leon Thurman, a voice instructor at MacPhail Center for the Arts in Minneapolis, offers a singing course for new and expectant mothers.

"Music excels at expressing emotion. It can help parents communicate their feelings to their children," said Thurman.

Many are in agreement with Thurman and his theory. As Pratt said, "It is becoming increasingly evident that everything the mother is exposed to impacts on the unborn child, and music that is pleasant to listen to will directly or indirectly affect the mood of that child."

Eager buyers flock to Saturday's auction

One man's loss is another man's gain. This was the general feeling of those who attended the Spring/Summer Lost and Found sale at the Wilkinson Center Ballroom on Saturday.

Hal Tagg, a senior in economics from Alberta, Canada, said he bought a leather basketball in perfect condition for $20. "This very same ball would sell for around $80 at a local sporting goods store," he said.

"I'm sorry for the person who lost the ball, but I'm also glad I got it for such a good price," said Tagg. He purchased the ball at the auction held for some of the higher priced items.

Waneen Nield, director of BYU Lost and Found, said that only some of the more attractive items are sold at the auction. "We leave most of the nicer things right on the tables for people to browse through," she said, pointing to the numerous jewelry tables. "But the auction is a very popular area at each sale."

The auction tends to drive the prices up a little higher, according to Tagg. "But it allows everyone to get a fair shot at the items compared to the first-come-first-served method on the tables," he said.

Debbie Frogley, a senior in psychology from Davenport, Iowa, and the student supervisor of Lost and Found, said employees are not allowed to purchase any items from Lost and Found. "It's too bad because there were some really good deals out there," she said.

Lost and Found sales usually attract lots of families and people from different ethnic groups who are looking for bargains, said Frogley.

"We even saw people from local pawn shops who came to buy various items to resell in their stores," she said.

A captures NBA crown

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — As left the floor, he seemed some- w a kid on the playground again, iling broadly in victory, slapping ds, hugging his teammates. Afterward, 40-year-old Kareem Abdul-Jabbar slipped back into his stly private persona. "I may not show it so much now, t I'm elated," the Lakers center d after Los Angeles defeated ston 106-93 Sunday to win their rth NBA title since 1980. It's really hard to say that this is the best championship I've won, since all were important," said Ab- dul-Jabbar, who now has played on five NBA cham- pionship teams. "But at 40 years old, it cer- tainly means a heck- uva a lot." Abdul-Jabbar, appearing in the postseason for a league-record 16th year, showed little sign of his age. He led the Lakers with 32 points in the clinching sixth game against the Celtics, although he played just 29 minutes be- cause of foul trouble. Abdul-Jabbar, who also blocked four Celtic shots, es- sentially kept the Lakers in the game with 19 first-half points.

After trailing 56-51 at halftime, they took command by outscoring Boston 30-12 in the third quarter.

Abdul-Jabbar's performance was indicative of the Lakers' impressive balance.

Magic Johnson, who averaged 26.2 points, 13 assists and eight re- bounds for the finals, was named the Championship Series MVP; how- ever, the Lakers got outstanding ef- forts from a number of players in the clinching game.

James Worthy, who'd been in a shooting slump, scored 22 points on 10 of 16 shooting.

His hustling steal-and-save play early in the third quarter gave the Lakers their first lead, at 57-56, since the first quarter and seemed to ignite the Los Angeles rally.

Mychal Thompson, the reserve center-forward acquired from San Antonio during the off-season, also played a significant role for the Lak- ers, scoring 15 points and grabbing nine rebounds while spelling Abdul- Jabbar.

In the Celtics dressing room, Boston guard Dennis Johnson said, "No question I'm proud of this team and the effort it gave out there on the court."

"We went out and played hard and gave it a great effort," added Johnson, who led Boston with 33 points Sunday. "A lot of teams would have folded after what we went through. We just happened to run into a greater team."

In spite of injuries that sidelined reserves Scott Wedman and Bill Walton for almost the entire season, and injuries that slowed starters Robert Parish and Kevin McHale to a limp, the Celtics became only the fifth defending champion to reach the finals the next year.

"I think this team did a great job getting to the sixth game of the NBA finals after what happened to us since the beginning of the sea- son," said Boston Coach K.C. Jones, listing the injuries that dogged the Celtics this year.

"I liked the courage our guys showed, the hustle and determina- tion to get into it."

Golfers finish 14th at tourney

By RANDY REBER
Sports Editor

The sixth-seeded Cougar "dark horse" looked more like a pinto, as it had its moments but couldn't put it all together as a team.

Sophomore Steve Schneider of Sandy, was the only Cougar to put in an unspotted performance and finished with a four-round total of 292, good enough to put him in a three-way tie for 13th place.

"Steve played well, but he didn't get any help from us this week. Personally, I could have prepared a little better coming into the tournament," said Brent Franklin, a junior from Calgary, Alberta, Canada, who finished the tourney with a 306.

Schneider said "I played my game and no one else got it going. I found a way to play the course. I kept the ball in the fairway. You have to be in control on this course (Scarlet Course).

"I was one under on our front nine and came close on our 10th and 13th holes, but on the 13th I three-putted for a par. If I would have made a birdie there I would have gone two under. I feel good about everything here."

The Cougar golfers, under the direction of Head Coach Karl Tucker, have a track record that would even make Lavell Edwards envious. For only the fourth time in the last 20 years the Cougars failed to make the nation's top 10 — although placing 14th is nothing to be ashamed of.

"I'm not disappointed. I still can't tell you what happened to us the first two days here. We prepared the best way we could. We played well all year and came in on such a high after winning our conference meet. I wouldn't have wanted it any differently before we came here," said Tucker.

BYU's Eduardo Herrera, a senior from Cali, Colombia, felt the Cougar golfers just weren't as relaxed as they should have been, and that they tried too hard. Herrera finished the tournament at 302 — tied for 55th place.

One other highlight of the tournament for BYU was Jon Baker's performance. Baker, a junior from Mesa, Ariz., turned in a steady four-day total of 307.

"Jon Baker's performance has to be encouraging. It shows what he is capable of doing and he should be able to build on it next year," said Tucker. "As a team we played too defensive and were too apprehensive. But we have a good nucleus to build on for next year."

Cougar Bruce Brockbank, a junior from Provo, finished at 314.

Oklahoma State took the nation's top honors, followed by Wake Forest, Oklahoma, Ohio State, Houston Baptist, Arkansas, Florida State, North Carolina, Fresno State and Houston.

Heat, pesticides hazardous to dogs

By A. CORY MALOY
Universe Staff Writer

The Utah Humane Society is warning dog owners to protect their pets against heat and to watch for the possibility of their dog ingesting chemical treatments put on lawns.

Pattie Johnson, Humane Society spokesperson, said people need to beware of the threat of death to dogs left inside cars during the hot season.

"A closed car becomes very hot, very fast. Even with the windows open, the temperature inside can reach 102 degrees in only 10 minutes," said Johnson.

"A dog can only withstand the heat for a short time before it suffers brain damage or death."

Gary Farwell, an Orem veterinarian, said dogs do not sweat. They cool their bodies by taking short rapid breaths — panting.

"Panting is far less efficient than sweating and the air in cars makes it even more difficult because the air is already hot."

Farwell said only one fourth of all overheated dogs will receive veterinary treatment. The rest usually die.

Lynn Tyler, Humane Society executive director, said the Humane Society receives several calls per week reporting dogs left in hot cars.

"Last week we rescued a dog that was about to pass out."

Tyler and Farwell agree that pet owners should just leave their animals at home instead of bringing them along in the car and leaving them in the suffocating heat.

Weed killers and pesticides are hidden menaces to cats and dogs. The poisons must be applied with discretion and not indiscriminately. Dogs who run across chemically treated lawns can be poisoned when they lick their paws.

"We suggest pet owners keep their animals off the treated lawn until after it rains, or until the owners have an opportunity to thoroughly water the lawn," said Johnson.

Farwell said the problem occurs when people do their own lawn treatments.

People treat their lawns then turn on the water, which leaves pools of concentrated chemicals that a dog or cat can drink.

He said professional lawn treatment companies are better because they educate customers of potential dangers to animals.

Substance abuse serious problem, lecturer warns

By CHRISTINE KILLIAN
Universe Staff Writer

Addiction is not a good way to solve problems, and frequently causes problems itself, said Gale Everton, adolescent chemical program director at Charter Canyon Hospital.

The individual initially may use drugs as an escape from loneliness or pressure, she said during a lecture last week at Charter Canyon Hospital. Eventually the substance the person is using to solve problems starts causing them.

Everton, a Ph.D. candidate in clinical psychology at BYU, said one out of every seven people in the United States is an alcoholic, and it is estimated that each alcoholic negatively affects 47 people. She also said that 70 percent of people who go through treatment stay sober and drug free.

The family of the drug or alcohol addict are as affected as the individual himself. "Everyone who is in a relationship with the addict suffers from the disease of denial," said Everton.

"We say things to ourselves like 'It hasn't affected our family that much,' or 'They're still the best worker I've got' in order to minimize the importance of the addiction," she said.

Many people view addiction as a matter of willpower when, in fact, it is a disease process that is very difficult to control. "The process of addiction is so powerful that it dictates behavior," she said. A person may realize the negative effects of the addiction and not be able to stop.

Tolerance is the first sign of addiction, said Everton. This takes place when the person continues to consume larger amounts of a harmful substance in order to get the same psychological and physical effect.

The reason one does this is that the substance actually causes an alteration in brain chemistry, the brain gets used to functioning with the change, and the person needs more of the drug to feel good.

At an individual's maximum level of tolerance, he can no longer consume large amounts of the drug and has to start decreasing his intake. The problem is that he continues to get the same effect in spite of the decrease.

The second sign of addiction is abstinence, said Everton. When the person thinks he might have a problem, he sets up restrictions to prove to himself and others that he is in control. One might say "I'm only going to drink after 5 p.m.," or "I'll only take drugs at parties."

One might be able to stop for a determined period of time, but as soon as that time is over, he starts again. Also, even when one practices abstinence, he finds a way to bend the restrictions. He tells himself "It's OK to drink today because it's a holiday."

Withdrawal is the final sign of addiction. This is the combination of psychological and physical effects that occur after stopping the behavior.

Everton said that withdrawal can occur with any type of addiction, regardless of whether it is physical or psychological.

Everton gave some guidelines for encouraging the addict to seek help.

"We can start by acknowledging that a problem exists, then seek for a solution. Often within the family of an addict, there is an attitude of 'You don't talk, you don't trust, you don't feel.'"

"We ignore the problem, frequently unintentionally. We tell the children to leave Daddy alone, or Mommy threw up because she has the flu, instead of telling them the real reasons," she said.

To be most effective, one must adopt a caring attitude. If we operate under another motive, such as anger or fear of damage to one's reputation, we put the person in a position where he defends his addiction.

The best way to handle the matter is to let the person know what you see going on, how it has affected you, and then give the person some options, Everton said.

She emphasized that we must give options we can live with. "If we tell the person to get treatment or we will divorce them, kick them out of the house, etc., we must be ready to do these things."

Everton said that addiction is partly genetic. A person who has an addicted parent or grandparent is four times more likely than the average person to become addicted.

She advised that if parents know of an addiction within the extended family, they should make their children aware of this.
